

Mural for Chaucer School

The design is inspired by local wildlife and uses vivid blocks of colour to create bright, striking contrast that catches students' attention and enhances the functionality of the space. Butterflies and birds are placed within students' reach, making the wall art interactive. The overall approach favours simplicity and comfort. Incorporating New Zealand's native wildlife makes the wall more decorative and strengthens the area's sense of belonging and welcome.

About the Mural Artist:

Bary is always passionate about bringing joy and meaning into the community. He is currently studying to become a licensed Art Psychotherapist. He used to be an art teacher for many years. Mural work is a way for him to expand his skills and a way to help create a meaningful community.

"I'm always interested in art and creativity, and I believe art can enhance learning and bring out the best potential in students."
